
Pregnancy

Posted by James - 2007/08/20 23:20

How do people deal with pregnant patients?

There are obviously benefits for pregnant women but the potential side effects can be tragic.

My wife does deal with pregnant clients, but is almost paranoid about just what she uses.

=====

Re:Pregnancy

Posted by Somnilocus - 2007/09/18 17:50

I only play with fragrance for myself, so I really can't say I knew that there could be any problems from general fragrance oils and such.

Or are you talking about applying oils to the skin?

=====

Re:Pregnancy

Posted by hazephase - 2007/09/22 13:12

There are certain constrictions to the oil but it is not a problem as if you have a book it will tell you where and when you can use different things.

=====

Re:Pregnancy

Posted by hazephase - 2007/09/22 13:12

There are certain constrictions to the oil but it is not a problem as if you have a book it will tell you where and when you can use different things.

=====

Re:Pregnancy

Posted by SingleAgain - 2007/10/01 17:43

The problem is that some oils are abortifacents, and others can cause premature uterine contractions. Others still can affect diabetes which can accompany pregnancy for some women.

Given the risks I chose to avoid almost everything when I was expecting. I used only lavender and tea tree oil, and both only in small quantities as an antibiotic agent in preference to chemical alternatives that I felt would be far less safe.

=====