Well hazephase you could find out those cars in India. There are 5 to 6 types of cars already in India. Most of them was lunched in North India. I saw a car in Mumbai too.

Essentially these cars burn a mixture of both gas and some sort of biodiesel (such as ethanol). This means that they don't have the awful performance that pure ethanol cars have while burning less fossil fuel.

I believe hybrid cars are more fuel efficient because they build up energy when breaking. That energy is used and helps the car use less gas. But a negative thing is that they do not really save you all that much money or fuel until years of use.
